Chapter 1 by Aaron Hartmann

There once was a curious cat who always found himself learning new things. You might be thinking that all cats are curious but this one is extra special. This one got into major trouble.

Chapter 2 by Nils B.

He was always interested in heights. He often sat on different roofs just to look for adventure. One day he caught a glimpse of a mysterious cat patrolling at night near the yellow valley. He followed the mysterious cat.

Chapter 3 by Eva

He followed stealthily until the mysterious cat stopped. The cat sensed that the curious cat was there so he spun around and hissed, it was as if the cat didn't want any one knowing he was here. But why? thought the curious cat. The next thing he knew was the stranger cat had disappeared and there was only a scratch mark left on the roof top.

Chapter 4 by Molly G

The curious cat wasn't going to let him slip through his paws so easily. The mysterious cat might be clever, but he wouldn't get far. The curious cat jumped into thick trees, towering above, creating a leafy canopy. He was climbing the dark bark, speckling the dark bark with yellows. Moss carpeted the ground. The curious cat, deeper, deeper, his black paws padding silently along. He didn't know what drew him on, deeper into the heart of the forest. It was a tugging sensation, pulling him. A sixth sense?

Suddenly, the trees and bushes thinned out, creating a small clearing. The moss abruptly stopped, showing green grass. Something held the curious cat back, stopping him in his tracks on the outskirts of the clearing. Then a barely audible padding began. The curious cat jumped into the nearest bush, pushing down until he was hidden by the thick leaves, with only his whiskers sticking out. Through the leaves he saw a group of cats, marching, their heads up high. A cat- the cat. The mysterious cat stepped out of the lines and emitted a yowl. The cats chorused a reply, their eyes trained upward. With a flourish a cat jumped through the trees. She landed elegantly, her beautiful gray fur not in the least ruffled. The congregation of cats bowed.

Chapter 5 by celloandjello

The curious cat peered through the leaves at the meeting. The mysterious cat started walking slowly and elegantly through the congregation of cats.

The curious cat's heart pounded. He was curious- so curious to find out what was going on and who was the mysterious cat. Anyone could tell that she was a cat with importance.

All of a sudden, the mysterious cat suddenly turned her head in the direction of the bush. The curious cat's eyes opened wide. The mysterious cat's eyes were a stunning emerald green that captured you immediately. The curious cat was captivated.

The mysterious cat started walking purposefully in the direction of the curious cat's bush. The curious cat felt a jolt of panic and started to slowly back deeper into the bush. But he couldn't stop look away from those eyes. He stopped backing into the bush. All he could do was watch those shining emeralds get closer and closer...

Chapter 6 by Orange Juice

It was as if a spell had been cast on the curious cat. He felt like a fly trapped on a spiderweb, and a mortal sense of doom washed over him as he stood frozen in that bush. He was sure that this time, his curiosity had gotten the best of him.

4 paws..

The emeralds seemed to change color and shape as they got closer, morphing into two plump, red apples sliced through the middle.

2 paws...

The mysterious cat's body shifted into something familiar. The curious cat gasped aloud as the mysterious cat took on his true form.

Chapter 7 by Daniel Irlam

The curious cat was taken aback as in front of him stood a broad Siberian Husky with fur as soft as a feathered cushion. It's eyes glared into the mysterious cat who couldn't help but notice a further transformation, those sparkling emerald eyes that had captured the cat only moments ago were absent. Instead the cat was now staring into one cold icy eye and a deep warm brown eye.

The other cats had fled and a feeling of emptiness began to drown the curious cat as the dog homed in on him. The dogs jaws widened as it bared its teeth and began to bark, the cat shut its eyes and breathed in to make itself a smaller target, despite being fully aware it wouldn't make any difference. SNAP.

The cat felt light, floaty almost weightless. This was it, the end he didn't want to open his eyes until he heard barking getting quieter and quieter and that's when the cat noticed something around its body a claw? It was gripping him but not tight or aggressively it was much more gentle than that. The cat opened his eyes and looked down, he was lifted above and over the trees ascending higher and moving quickly, he looked up and couldn't believe what he saw.

Chapter 8 by -

As his captor continued to float higher and higher, the curious cat began to relax. He now knew that harm would not come to him now. For above him, the clouds gathered into a curious formation. Each cloud took on the appearance of a cat tail with its glowing shades of sparkling colors. Colors so brilliant and deep that they seemed to glow from within.

The curious cat began to grin, for he felt as if he was young again, suckling on his mama's breast. But he was also nervous, because he didn't know what to do. Slowly the Husky turned to him and his eyes began to change, AGAIN. The eye that was once icy and cold, was now a blue, a blue deeper than any ocean. The other eye that was once warm and brown, was now green, greener than the hills that the curious cat only dreamed of exploring.

All of a sudden the curious cat felt majestic. For looking into the eyes of the Husky, was like looking into his own. For he too had the exact same shades of mixed colors. Suddenly, the curious cat became even MORE curious, and a little bit scared. For..... WHAT DID THIS MEAN?
